

“I thought: I can’t change the world, but I can be a different contractor.”

NATALIE WAKNINE

Integrity and follow through are two ideals many businesses lack in, however, there are still people who believe these two things are in congruence to the longevity and success of a business. Natalie Waknine, owner of NES Property Services is a stellar example of a person who has a deep understanding of how invaluable being true to each individual client really is.

“We are a company based on integrity, full disclosure, and constant communication,” said Waknine, “We have ongoing relationships with our clients.”

Waknine prides herself on keeping all lines of communication open with each client she takes on and accredits that to much of her success in both the construction and real estate business. Since she deals with remodeling people’s homes to be what they envision, she makes it a point to prioritize their happiness and also ensures that they trust her to fulfill the job seamlessly.

She discovered her love for remodeling while she began work with her brother, who was a contractor. Although she attended college at CSUN and earned a degree in psychology, she decided to pursue the field of remodels and real estate independently since it infallibly suited her, and making homes beautiful was her true passion. Throughout her journey, she also uncovered a love for preparing homes to sell, which she offers through her company today.

While building her company, Waknine made it her primary goal to hold a reputation of being available to her clients whenever need be, in addition to being a company that valued the client’s time first and foremost, which do not always go hand in hand in the world of remodeling, or preparing a home to be shown. Waknine also focuses heavily on remodeling homes in the community, which allows people to revamp their dwelling place.

“I thought: I can’t change the world, but I can be a different contractor,” said Waknine.

Her devotion to completing the job in not only a time efficient manner, but also a financially conscious one, has boosted her rapport in the community of being a contractor who handles her job with grace.

“I’m the contractor to be completely honest from the beginning, we don’t flake, and we have ample crews, we are definitely different,” said Waknine.
